

THE CONCEPT OF NEOLOGISM: A COMPARATIVE STUDY FOR ROMANIAN AND EUROPEAN CULTURE

Marius-Radu Clim, PhD, Scientific Researcher, Romanian Academy, Iași Branch

Abstract: The present analysis aims at briefly presenting the neologism issue in the representative Romanian and European studies from a historic perspective. We are trying to analyze the meanings of the neologism concept in the specialized works and in the dictionaries belonging both to the Romanian and to the European linguistics. In the linguistic works the difficulties of classifying the new words in a language are obvious. we have mentioned authors in the Romanian linguistics field, such as Gh. Adamescu, S. Pușcariu, I. Iordan, Th. Hristea, but also others, that provide a diversity of approaches to this area. Several representative studies on neologism within the European linguistics are also pointed out, namely the works of L. Guilbert, L. Bloomfield, L. Hjelmslev, Maria T. Cabré, John Humbley and others. This comparative study mentions the meanings of neologism, but also its lexical family, in the Romanian dictionaries, starting from the first attestation in 1832 in Iordache Golescu's work entitled Condica limbii rumânești (The Romanian language register) and continuing with Vocabular franțezo-românesc (French-Romanian vocabulary) elaborated by P. Poenar, F. Aaron and G. Hill, the dictionaries of Negulici, Stamati, Laurian and Massim, DLR and ending with the editions of the Dictionary of Neologisms elaborated by Florin Marcu.

The neologisms raise important problems to the authors of dictionaries. The problems are due to both the lack of attestations and to the differences in approaching neologisms in specialized works.

Keywords: neologism, Romanian lexicography, dictionary, borrowing, language history

We intend to pursue the analysis of the concept of neologism in language researchers' work and then illustrate the definitions found in lexicographical works. Through this approach we seek to highlight specific nuances offered by neologism analysis and the personal contribution of Romanian linguists to understand this linguistic phenomenon. Etymologically, the term neologism (< fr. néologisme, cf. gr. νέος și λόγος) designate a new word entered in a language, regardless the way of formation and origin. This transparent etymology can offer a very convenient definition of the concept. But if we approach this issue in its entirety, we find that the very concept of neologism is more complex and requires a deeper analysis. In addition, the notion of neologism was and is extensively discussed by philologists, who gave multiple semantic values.

Philological debates prove that there are obvious difficulties in classifying new words. One of the experts who highlighted this difficulty was Gh. Adamescu, a scientist concerned about the concept of multiple etymology, claiming that "numirea de 'neologism', 'cuvânt nou' este o însușire foarte relativă și care se poate pierde¹" (Adamescu, p. 49). He points out that generally, people have the awareness that some words are new and others old, but

¹ "the appointment of 'neologism', as 'new word' is a very relative attribute and it can be lost" (our translation).

“însușirea de noutate a neologismelor este relativă²” (ibidem, p. 50), the loans being considered new entrants in the language only for a certain period of time. The frequent use and their passage from literary or scientific register in the usual language speakers lead to their assimilation in the current vocabulary.

In the first volume of Limba română, Sextil Pușcariu distinguishes several types of loans. Based on the demarcation made by the Swiss linguist Ernst Tappolet, S. Pușcariu discerns the loan luxury (“Luxuslehnwort”) from the loan needed (“Bedürfnisslehnwort”). The latter enters the language with the concept designated by, that is called cultural term (“Kulturwort”). These needed terms are determined by social and cultural development, therefore “asemenea împrumuturi se găsesc în toate limbile și le găsim în număr mare mai ales în epoci în care starea culturală a unui popor a făcut salturi mari, sau când civilizația a pătruns în straturile largi ale populației³” (Pușcariu¹, p. 366). Once in language, the words adapt to the lexical system of the Romanian language and form new families of words or derivatives on land language, thus leading to no longer be able to distinguish between these cultural terms and loans made to people to people contact day (“Lehnwörter”). If the loan is made only in the cultivated stratum of society and it is employed only when we are dealing with neologisms (“Fremdwörter”). Users of these neologisms - usually the educated bilingual or trilingual speakers, - recognize their foreign origin. Thus, Pușcariu makes a distinction between borrowing cultural terms which is achieved by continuous contact between the two nations and spreads to all the social levels, in opposition to the neologism that is used only by the educated stratum of society. The latter is recognized as a new term and has a precise etymology for those who use it, as they are connoisseurs of the source language. Finally, regarding the neologism, the Romanian linguist also highlights those terms that are perceived as “un corp străin în organismul limbii⁴” and they are treated as such, called barbarisms.

However, this distinction cannot be rigid, since the language evolves and the vocabulary is constantly transformed. This change of language also produces a change of the statutes of certain terms. Thus, a neologism can become a cultural term, if it is taken also by other social fields. Moreover, a barbarism can become a loan (“Lehnwörter”) and even a luxury one, finally adapting to the specific of the receiving language. In conclusion, such a typology is necessary for understanding the phenomenon of language borrowing and the processes of adaptation of terms, but it cannot describe exhaustively all the innovations in the vocabulary.

Iorgu Jordan, like other philologists, moreover, claims that neologisms are “elemente lingvistice împrumutate, începând cu primii ani ai veacului XIX, câteodată poate și ceva mai înainte, din limbile de circulație occidentală⁵” (Jordan, p. 3). This delimitation is motivated by the fact that the linguist refers to a certain stage of evolution of the Romanian language, characterized by a large number of loans in that time of history, justified by the fact that the Romanian language had entered into a long process of cultivation and transformation, as modern literary language.

Referring to the meaning of the term neologism, the author states that two meanings could be assigned to it: “în sens larg, este neologism orice cuvânt nou, împrumutat sau creat prin mijloace interne; în sens restrâns, numai cuvântul străin, împrumutat la o dată nu prea

² “that assimilation of the novelty of the neologisms is relative” (our translation).

³ “such loans are in all languages and we find them in large numbers especially in the era in which cultural condition of a people make big jumps or when civilization has penetrated the wider layers of population” (our translation).

⁴ “foreign bodies in the language body” (our translation).

⁵ “linguistic elements that were borrowed from the Occidental languages starting with the early years of the XIXth century, sometimes maybe a little earlier” (our translation).

îndepărtată, se numește neologism”. Therefore, on the land of Romanian language neologisms could only be considered “cuvintele împrumutate în perioada de timp acoperită de conceptul limba română contemporană și despre care vorbitorii au conștiința că sunt cuvinte noi”⁶ (Jordan–Robu, p. 310). The Romanian linguist admits that even before the nineteenth century there were many borrowed words into the Romanian language and “au avut la început un regim asemănător cu al neologismelor, pe care însă datorită uzajului, l-au pierdut”⁷.

The diversity of definitions offered to this concept is highlighted by Rodica Zafiu. The author considers, in an article entitled Neologismul și purismul (Neologism and purism), that means of defining neologism in the Romanian linguistics was determined by the process of adaptation to the Western culture, developed in the second half of the nineteenth century. Therefore, R. Zafiu believes that in the definition of neologism a subdomain is almost exclusively selected from the “din accepția lui ‘internațională’ (de ‘cuvânt nou’), e selectat aproape exclusiv un subdomeniu, constituit din împrumuturile moderne, culte”⁸ (Zafiu, Neologismul, p. 11). This restriction in use is justified by the fact that the loans and the internal creations at a smaller scale are actually new lexical elements.

Another trend is to consider as neologisms also the terms that entered the language since the seventeenth century “în măsura în care fac parte din sfera culturii moderne”⁹. This delimitation is justified by the fact that these terms had a limited circulation, being reintroduced into the language and the public use only in the nineteenth century.

R. Zafiu points out that through these delimitations, the concept of neologism leaves at an important scale its etymological and internationally accepted meaning. Yet, for the Romanian linguistics, the neologism becomes a well-defined label: “diferența dintre o cultură a elitei, pro-occidentală și recentă – și una populară, tradițională”¹⁰.

A final trend for interpreting the neologism in the Romanian area is the observation that the neologism “e mai puțin poetic, mai puțin literar, având mai puține conotații, ecouri, ambiguități și fiind asociat de obicei cu sfera comunicării eficiente și impersonale”. Although, as mentioned by R. Zafiu, this “attitude” has changed during the recent decades, “nostalgia sau prestigiul purismului continuă să acționeze și azi”¹¹ (ibidem, p. 11). What is worth being highlighted is the fact itself that these different ways of defining the neologism emphasize the effects of adopting neologic terms in Romanian language.

Theodor Hristea, concerned with the lexical creations of the Romanian language, has proven to be a critical and profound analyst of the problems of the Romanian vocabulary. In a chapter that refers to the loan in the Romanian language, he admits that from an etymological point of view, the neologism should be considered every new word in a certain language either borrowed or created with the internal means of the language, but acknowledges that “în lingvistica românească sunt socotite neologisme în special împrumuturile pe care româna le-a făcut din limbile apusene ori direct din latină pe cale savantă”¹² (Hristea 1984, p. 50). Among

⁶ “in a broad sense, the neologism represents any new word, borrowed or created through internal means; in a restricted way, only the foreign word, borrowed not very long time ago, is called neologism”... “the words that were borrowed during the period covered by the concept of contemporary Romanian language of whom the speakers are aware that they are new words” (our translation).

⁷ “at the beginning they were treated similarly to neologisms, but because of usage, they lost this treatment” (our translation).

⁸ “international” acceptance (of new word), which is formed of modern, studied loans” (our translation).

⁹ “under the condition that they are part of the modern culture field” (our translation).

¹⁰ “the difference between a culture of the elite that is pro-occidental and recent, and popular, traditional one” (our translation).

¹¹ “is less poetic, less literary, with fewer connotations, echoes, ambiguities and is usually associated with the area of efficient and impersonal communication”... “the nostalgia or prestige of purism continue to operate even nowadays” (our translation).

¹² “in the Romanian linguistics the neologisms are considered especially the loans that the Romanian language has made either from the Western languages or directly from Latin by scholastic influence” (our translation).

the articles of the author, a special study is devoted to the concept of neologism where there are mentioned different perceptions of the linguists regarding this issue. In the work Conceptul de neologism..., (The concept of neologism) Th. Hristea believes that although there are many studies on lexical borrowing, the concept of neologism was not such an important concern for the researchers of the Romanian vocabulary.

He makes a summary of the studies of the neologism proving that, for example, in French, some lexicographers avoid using the term of neologism, even if it is attested in French since 1735 (cf. Robert, s.v.). Thus, the author emphasizes the relativity of the concept of neologism and, therefore, lexicographers avoid using the neologism brand, being more concerned with the dating of words.

The term neologism is replaced by many linguists with various periphrases: “new word”, “recent word”, “contemporary word”. For instance, Leonard Bloomfield in his famous work Language, uses other terms to define neologism, namely cultural borrowing, intimate borrowing and dialectal borrowing. Some authors of dictionaries prefer to use synonyms in order to explain the term of neologism. For example, Hartmann and Gregory James define neologism very briefly as “a word or phrase which has entered the language (as a BORROWING or a COINAGE or through SEMANTIC CHANGE)” (Hartmann–James, s.v. neologism). Yet, for the term borrowing, the authors develop the definition, providing a broad analysis of the concept. The dictionary article concludes with a list of synonyms, and the last mentioned is “neologism”. In another dictionary, entitled A Glossary of Historical Linguistics, the authors consider the neologism as a general concept that comprises all the lexical innovations of a language, whether borrowed from other languages, or words invented by the speakers, without being able to reveal the lexical source (Campbell–Mixco, s.v. neologism). Nevertheless, the authors also describe other concepts, namely borrowing, lexical borrowing, lexical innovation, language contact and loanword.

In the mentioned study, Th. Hristea makes a summary of researches on neologisms in the European languages. Thus, he notes that the German language has evolved from a very open attitude towards borrowing from French, Italian and Spanish, to a refractory attitude in the nineteenth century, preferring the semantic borrowing and the internal creations. Although in the German language the word Neologismus exists, in the literature of specialty the terms Fremdwort and Lehwort are preferred. The first represents the borrowed and integrated in the language, that are adapted to its phonetic and morphological system. By Fremdwort the specialists understand the neologisms or “foreign words”, which are still not adapted to the language system.

As we have already mentioned, this diversity of approaches is also found in the European literature of specialty. Further we shall highlight some of the most representative contributions regarding the definition of neologism. In the European linguistics, many linguists refuse or carefully avoid using the term of neologism. Instead, they use different collocations and synonyms: mot nouveau, mot contemporain, emprunt, borrowing, Fremdwort and others. Moreover, as Th. Hristea observes in the study of neologism, this concept is understood differently in our country compared to how it is perceived in the European linguistics.

In the work entitled Le langage... Louis Hjelmslev defines the neologism in a very restrictive manner, namely: „former des signes complètement nouveaux qui ne sont ni des transformations d'autre signes ni des introductions venues de l'extérieur” (Hjelmslev 1966, p. 94). Thus, the Danish linguist considers neologisms only the absolutely new creations of a language, creations that should not copy other models or should not be adaptations of them. He makes the distinction between mots d'emprunt and mots étrangers. The first ones represent words that were borrowed and adapted to the phonetic and morphological system of the “receiving” language, while mots étrangers are the terms whose form does not harmonize with the rest of the vocabulary. Foreign words are not subject to the specific rules of the structure of the receiving language, but to those of the original language. Thus, as mentioned by Hjelmslev, they are „des minoritaires pour lesquels il existerait une législation spéciale” (ibidem, p. 87).

Louis Guilbert, analyzing the lexical creativity of the French language, defines the lexical neology as „la possibilité de création de nouvelles unités lexicales, en vertu des règles de production incluses dans le système lexical” (Guilbert, p. 31). Depending on the creative intent of the speakers of a language, he divides neology into two big types: denominative neology and stylistic neology.

We have to mention here the basic idea of the study of L. Guilbert, namely the idea that only the term created in a language according to the system of that language can be considered „le véritable néologisme, que nous ne confondons pas avec le terme emprunté” (ibidem, p. 93). Therefore, he believes that most of the time, keeping a borrowed term in a the language is due not to a real need to express something new and to the impossibility of means in the used language, but rather to the fact that between the members of the same community there is a tendency towards uniformity. Thus, the use of a borrowed term by a speaker may be motivated by the simple imitation of others in the community.

Other researchers, lexicographers or terminologists have been particularly concerned with defining the field of neology as science that examines the changes in a language. For example, Maria Cabré highlights the dynamic nature of neology and its role of demonstrating the evolution of society. Therefore, neology is considered a „fenomen consistent a introduir en una llengua una unitat lèxica o un altre recurs lingüístic nous, que o poden haver estat creats aprofitant els recursos interns de la pròpia llengua o bé manvellats a una llengua forana” (Neologia, p. 14).

John Humbley states that neology is born by default within the speech „et si on cherche à l’implanter dans la langue, il convient naturellement de bien étudier les conditions qui président à sa naissance”. He considers neology a much broader field that includes all the lexical creations: „la néologie ce n’est pas seulement les créations possibles et réalisées, mais aussi les créations impossible et néanmoins réalisées” (Humbley, p. 176). The same statement is supported by Pruvost and Sablayrolles which emphasize the fact that the discursive nature of neologisms itself represents the cause for which neologisms have not been treated in the structuralism linguistic studies. Since the structuralists analyzed especially the language rather than the speech and the synchronic operation of the language to the prejudice of language evolution, the concept of neologism is almost missing in the grammar and linguistic studies (Pruvost–Sablayrolles, p. 59).

By presenting these acceptations¹³ of the concept of neologism, first of all, we can observe the heterogeneity of the approaches that demonstrate the diversity itself of the changes within a language. In the European specialty literature, the structuralism vision has imposed an attitude of neglect or rejection of neologisms, because they were considered deviations or accidents that disrupt the stability of the system at a certain time. For the Romanian culture, an attitude of rejection of neologisms has characterized some of the intellectuals during the period of modernization of the literary language, when the language was enriched with a large number of loans, especially from the Romance languages. What is unanimously accepted nowadays is that neologisms also represent a trademark of the culturalism of a people. Thus, a large number of neologisms entered into a language in a given period of time is the evidence of a cultural progress for the speakers of that language.

¹³ More acceptations from linguistic works and dictionaries are presented in an extended Romanian version of this article, in CLIM, pp. 51-85.

But perhaps the biggest problem that the researchers faced when analyzing neologisms is precisely the character of “novelty” of the words. Since the novelty feature of the neologic terms is relative, this matter has been discussed by linguists in a different manner. A first reaction was the reluctance to using the term of neologism and replaces it with other synonyms, less ambiguous. In the Romanian linguistics, through neologism we understand, in most cases, only terms those were borrowed from other languages. But a limitation of the meaning of this concept is not typical only to the Romanian linguistics. As we have already proven, if in Iorgu Iordan’s opinion the neologism is represented only by the Latin-Romance terms integrated into the Romanian language during its process of modernization, for Louis Guilbert the true neologisms are only the words formed within the French language. L. Hjelmslev is even more restrictive in his approach, considering neologisms only the ex-nihilo terms which are neither loans nor creations according to internal models of a language. Another difference is between keeping and loosing the status of neologism for the new lexical terms. In conclusion, the diversity of innovations in a language has determined the apparition of acceptations of neologism that differentiated among themselves both according to the characteristics of the analyzed language and also because of the attitude of linguists towards the changes in a language.

In the Romanian dictionaries, the neologism term was first mentioned in 1832, in Iordache Golescu’s work Condica limbii rumânești. A particular concern for explaining and adapting the words is found in Vocabular franțezo-românesc (Romanian-French Vocabulary) realized by P. Poenar, F. Aaron and G. Hill. The authors try to define the French term by the corresponding neologic Romanian term, followed by a periphrasis which explains in Romanian words the meaning of that term. We observe both the interest to introduce as many neologisms from the French language as possible, but also the care to adapt them to the specific of the Romanian language. Terms are taken, as the authors mention, from the Dictionnaire de l’Académie Française, second edition, but also from other foreign dictionaries. The authors wanted the Romanian neologic terms to be as close to the foreign etymons as possible. Here are the acceptations given to the neologism term by some Romanian dictionaries listed chronologically:

néologisme „neologism, obișnuință, năvălire de a întrebuița ziceri nouă, sau de a da zicerilor obișnuite înțelesuri nouă; se ia spre rău” (Poenar–Aaron–Hill)

neologism „căutare de expresii și de vorbe nuoe” (Negulici)

neologism „plecare, patimă de a tot înnoi, a reforma (limba)” (Stamati) „espresione, covent, intorsura, sens sau forma de covent neusitata inco in limba populare” (Laurian–Massim, s.v. neo-).

Another view of this concept is found in the Dicționarul limbii române (Romanian language dictionary). Unlike the explanatory dictionaries, where the use determines the order of the meanings, in the academic dictionary that we mentioned, the meanings of this term are listed according to the chronological order of the first certifications, because this word itself is considered to be a “neologism”. By this lexicographical technique, the historical evolution of the meanings of this term is emphasized. In the dlr, the neologism is defined as:

„NEOLOGÍSM s. n. 1. (Învechit) Neologie. Cf. negulici, stamati, d. Neologismul nesocotit așa ne-au învălătucit, încît nu mai putem zice cele mai simple lucruri... fără amestecare de vorbe străine. russo, s. 93, cf. prot.-pop., n. d., costinescu, barcianu, alexi, w.

2. Cuvânt nou împrumutat sau format de curînd într-o limbă cu mijloace proprii; (neobișnuit) novicism. Logofătul Conachi are neologisme, dar hultuite pe tulpină românească. russo, s. 52, cf. pontbriant, d. Cel din urmă semn caracteristic în stilul direcției nouă... este depărtarea neologismelor celor de prisos. maioreescu, cr. i, 384, cf. ddrf, șăineanu, d. u. Traduse... o istorie universală, sau, cum îi zice el, care nu prea întrebuițează neologisme: „Istorie de toată lumea”. iorga, l. i, 509. Eram prigonitor pînă la exces al neologismelor și găseam în literatura populară și în popor o perspectivă de noutate. sadoveanu, o. xvi, 439, cf. id. e. 34. Neologismele oferă cazuri mai numeroase de șovăire a accentuării. iordan, l. r. 152, cf. 82. Numele autorului glumeț al atîtor cuvinte stîlcite și fraze pompoase... suferea soarta neologismelor rostite de cetățenii din Obor. arghezi, t. c. 21. A putut exista la un moment dat impresia că neologismele exprimă mai bine, în orice împrejurare, nuanța gândirii. vianu, s. 189, cf. id. m. 181. Nu totdeauna neologismele zdruncină situația cuvintelor vechi, ci sînt cazuri cînd, dimpotrivă, o consolidează. graur, f. l. 196, cf. 109. Studiul conține o transcriere a neologismelor recoltate din majoritatea operelor lui A. Pann. scl 1957, 210. Pentru operația alegerii buștenilor din care se construiește o plută... se folosește neologismul „a asorta”. arvinte, term. 63. ◇ (La sg. cu valoare de pl.) Dar dacă stilul scriitoarei e numai inegal, limba e uneori supărătoare prin goana frenetică după neologismul nearmonic și inutil. lovinescu, c. vii, 83. În limba literară, neologismul intră firesc, acolo unde e nevoie de el, pentru conciziune și precizie. sadoveanu, e. 34. După 1835..., neologismul îmbracă o formă adecvată, integrîndu-se în fonetica specifică a limbii noastre. contribuții, ii, 96. ◇ (Atribuind calitatea ca un adjectiv) Verbele neologisme de conjugarea I. iordan, g. 13, cf. 70.

- Pronunțat: ne-o-. – Pl.: neologisme. – Și : (învechit) neologhism s. m.
- Din fr. néologisme”.

We chose to present the entire article of the dictionary, because the cited examples also emphasize the evolution of the attitude of the cultivated people over time, regarding this concept.

An interesting semantic development is illustrated in the editions of the Dicționarul de neologisme (Dictionary of neologisms) of Florin Marcu. Since its first edition in 1961 to the edition written in 2008, this dictionary offers various conceptions regarding the neologism and also new terms from the family of words that were formed within the language or were borrowed. A first conceptual difference is observed even from the second edition. In dn, the neologism is defined as „cuvânt nou într-o limbă, împrumutat dintr-o limbă străină sau format prin mijloace proprii în limba respectivă”¹⁴. The authors note that this acceptation is mainly used in the linguistics field. The second edition does not keep the “linguistic” mention, defining the term as: „cuvânt împrumutat dintr-o limbă străină sau creat prin mijloace proprii în limba respectivă”¹⁵ (dn², s.v. neologism). As we can see, the authors give up the term “new word”, perhaps their justification being the ambiguity created by this appellation itself. But by this second definition, the concept of neologism is greatly expanded, because in their vision it would appear that we can consider as neologism every word, borrowed or formed in Romanian. This view is supported by the etymology of the term itself, which the authors mention after the definition.

In the following editions we observe a much greater concern both regarding the definitions given to the concepts of the lexical family and also regarding the etymology of words. Thus, in Noul dicționar de neologisme (The New Dictionary of neologisms), who was elaborated only by Florin Marcu, the neologism is defined as „cuvânt nou, împrumutat dintr-o limbă străină sau creat prin mijloace proprii în limba respectivă; (p. restr.) împrumut lexical recent. • accepție nouă a unui cuvânt”¹⁶ (ndn, s.v. neologism). The lexicographer gives up again to the mention “in linguistics”, but we see an increase of the complexity of the definition by adding a new semantic distinction: “new acceptance of a word”. The author was motivated by the semantic enrichment of the neologism concept and, due to the fact that in his work he introduces old Romanian terms with new acceptations, namely “exclusively semantic” neologisms, as Th. Hristea calls them (in Hristea 2004, p. 33).

¹⁴ “a new word in a language, borrowed from a foreign language or format by intrinsic means in that language” (our translation).

¹⁵ “word borrowed from a foreign language or created by their own means in that language” (our translation).

Despite the difficulties caused by the tentative to clearly define the concept, we observe the author’s concern to adapt the definition of both to the situation in the Romanian language and to the linguists’ vision regarding this issue.

The acceptations of the concept of neologism in the Romanian dictionaries presented here highlight the semantic, orthographic and orthoepic evolution in the Romanian language. By the definitions offered by the lexicographers, they emphasized both the history of perceptions of the speakers regarding this concept and also the ambiguities generated by it. Also, you may notice a difference between the way in which the term neologism is defined in the Romanian dictionaries and how it is treated in the works in the field of Romanian vocabulary research. Although from a conceptual point of view the neologism is understood as a new word borrowed from a foreign language or format the field of that language, in general, in the Romanian linguistics only the loans are considered to be neologisms.

In conclusion, in the Romanian culture there are multiple differences in defining neologism. As we have already presented, in the European cultural area there are also various visions regarding the concept of neologism. Nevertheless, globalization and especially standardization lead to the smoothing or rather, to the internationalization of the way in which neologism is defined. The Romanian culture will adapt to the European culture in this area, too.

Bibliografie

Adamescu = Adamescu, Gh., Adaptarea la mediu a neologismelor, în „Analele Academiei Române. Memoriile secțiunii literare”, seria a III-a, tom VIII, București, 1936–1938, p. 49-78.

Campbell–Mixco = Lyle Campbell, Mauricio J. Mixco A Glossary of Historical Linguistics, Edinburgh, Edinburgh University Press, 2007.

Clim = Marius-Radu Clim, Neologismul în lexicografia românească, Iași, Editura Universității „Alexandru Ioan Cuza”, 2012.

Guilbert = Louis Guilbert, La créativité lexicale, Paris, Librairie Larousse, 1975.

Hartmann–James = R.R.K. Hartmann, Gregory James, Dictionary of Lexicography, Londra, Editura Routledge, 1998.

Hjelmslev 1966 = Louis Hjelmslev, Le langage. Une introduction, Traduit du danois par Michel Olsen. Préface de Algirdas Julien Greimas, Paris, Les Editions de Minuit, 1966.

Hristea 1984 = Sinteze de limba română, Mioara Avram, Grigore Brâncuș, Gheorghe Bulgăr, Georgeta Ciompec, Ion Diaconescu, Theodor Hristea, Rodica Bogza-Irimie și Flora

¹⁶ “new word borrowed from a foreign language or created by intrinsic means in that language; recent lexical borrowing. • new acceptance of a word” (our translation).

Șuteu. Coordonator: Theodor Hristea. Ediția a treia, revăzută și din nou îmbogățită. București, Editura Albatros, 1984.

Hristea 2004 = Theodor Hristea, Conceptul de neologism (cu specială referire la limba română), în volumul Tradiție și inovație în studiul limbii române. Actele celui de-al 3-lea Colocviu al Catedrei de Limba Română (27–28 noiembrie 2003). Coordonator: Gabriela Pană Dindelegan, Secretari de redacție: Oana Uță Bărbulescu, Cristian Moroianu, București, Editura Universității din București, 2004, pp. 23-36.

Humbley = John Humbley, La Néologie: Avenir des Langues, în volumul La neologia en el tombant de segle, Edició a cura de M. Teresa Cabré, Judit Freixa i Elisabet Solé, Barcelona, Observatori de Neologia, Institut Universitari de Lingüística Aplicada, Universitat Pompeu Fabra, 2000, pp. 175-179.

Iordan = Iorgu Iordan, Sufixe românești de origine recentă (Neologisme). Extras din Buletinul Institutului de Filologie Română, vol. VI, Iași, Tipografia Alexandru A. Țerek, 1940.

Iordan–Robu = Iorgu Iordan, Vladimir Robu, Limba română contemporană, București, Editura Didactică și Pedagogică, 1978.

Neologia = Maria Teresa Cabré, La neologia efimera, în volumul Lèxic i neologia. Edició a càrrec de M. Teresa Cabré, Judit Freixa i Elisabet Solé, Barcelona, Observatori de Neologia, Institut Universitari de Lingüística Aplicada, Universitat Pompeu Fabra, 2008, pp. 13-27.

Pruvost–Sablayrolles = Jean Pruvost, Jean-François Sablayrolles, Les Neologismes, Paris, Presses Universitaires de France, 2003.

Pușcariu¹ = Sextil Pușcariu, Limba română, vol. I, Privire generală. București, Fundația pentru literatură și artă „Regele Carol II”, 1940.

Zafiu, Neologismul = Rodica Zafiu, Neologismul și purismul în „România literară”, anul XXXIV, 21–27 noiembrie 2001, numărul 46, p. 11.

Dicționare

dlr = Dicționarul limbii române (DLR). Serie nouă. Redactori responsabili: acad. Iorgu Iordan, acad. Alexandru Graur și acad. Ion Coteanu. București, Editura Academiei. Tomul VII. Partea 1. Litera N: 1971.

dn = Florin Marcu, Constant Maneca, Dicționar de neologisme, București, Editura Științifică, 1961.

dn² = Florin Marcu, Constant Maneca, Dicționar de neologisme, ediția a II-a revăzută și adăugită, București, Editura Științifică, 1966.

Laurian–Massim = A. T. Laurian și I. C. Massim, Dicționariul limbei române. După însărcinarea dată de Societatea Academică Română. Elaborat ca proiect. Tomu I A–H, 1871 [în realitate: 1873]; tomul II (colaboratori Iosef Hodosiu și G. Barițiu) I–Z, 1876; tom. III: Glosariu, care cuprinde vorbele din limba română străine prin originea sau forma lor, cum și cele de origine înduioasă, 1871 [în realitate: 1877], București, Noua Tipografie a Laboratorilor Români.

Negulici = I. D. Negulici, Vocabular român de toate vorbele străbune reprimate până acum în limba română, și de toate cele ce sunt a se mai primi d-acum înainte, și mai ales în științe, București, Tipografia Colegiului, 1848.

ndn = Florin Marcu, Noul dicționar de neologisme, București, Editura Academiei Române, 1997.

Poenar–Aaron–Hill = P. Peonar, F. Aaron și G. Hill, Vocabular franțezo-românesc, după cea din urmă ediție a Dicționarului de Academia Franțoească, cu adăogare de multe ziceri, culese din deosebite dicționare de..., tomul I: A–H, 1840; tomul II: I–Z, 1841, București, în tipografia Colegiului Sf. Sava.

Stamati = Pah. T. Stamati, Disionăraș românesc de cuvinte tehnice și altele greu de înțeles. Întâia ediciune, Iași, Tipografia Buciumului Român, 1851.